Bio

Paul Aloisi is a Canadian born, internationally exhibiting Artist and Environmental Designer who works across and integrates disciplines. With a decade of experience working in public art, sculpture/installation and inter-media abstraction, he is known for producing experimental works often incorporating kinetic components, animated light and projected video. His recent projects have explored human interaction and communication through investigations of public space, architecture, typography and their relationships. His practice involves both permanent public artworks and unsolicited ephemeral interventions to engage the public and stimulate their participation in 'moments of art', particularly through his renowned Open Canvas Project.

A recurrent recipient of grant funding from the Ontario Arts Council and Toronto Arts Council, Aloisi's studio practice is complemented by regular participation in artist residencies abroad. An experienced group facilitator with learners at all levels of education, Aloisi has developed arts education curriculum for the Luminato Festival and Toronto District School Board and is a faculty member in the Environmental Design program at OCAD University.
